Scientific and Cultural Collaborative fuels effort to connect classrooms with arts and culture education

Connecting teachers with opportunities to bring arts and culture education to their students and classrooms is the focus of a new program by the Scientific and Cultural Collaborative.

The effort, called Explorable Places, seeks to provide teachers with an easy way to search for and connect with arts and culture education opportunities for their students. Additionally, the program provides arts, culture, and science organizations a platform to provide their educational offerings to teachers.

The program is a two-year pilot project focused on making it easier for educational connections to be made and for teachers to better connect with the vast array of programs, assemblies, field trips, and workshops available through the arts and culture community.
